Head of a man

Brief description: Stained glass panel featuring a head of a man. Painted by either Heaton, Butler and Bayne as is more their style or perhaps by Cowell in about 1920.

This panel depicts the head and neck of a man looking to his right. He has delicate features, with deep-set and wide eyes, a thin straight nose, and thin mouth with a soft moustache. He gazes past the viewer with a slightly wistful expression. His hair is red, and parted on one side, with black painted lines representing the strands.
