

Cherub Clerk & Cherub Scribe

Brief description: Stained glass roundel set in square slab quarries. This panel depicts a winged cherub sitting on a pile of three ledgers. Designed and made by Christopher Webb in the 1920's or 1930's

Stained glass roundel set in square slab quarries. The panel depicts a small winged cherub sitting on a pile of three ledgers. One leg is crossed over the other. On his lap is an open book entitled Minutes. He has a feather quill in his mouth. An inkpot with two feather quills in it is on the floor. He appears to be sitting on a miniature table-topped mountain covered in short grass. The Elizabeth Garrett Anderson Hospital was founded specifically to treat women and bears the name of the first woman to qualify as a physician in Britain. Above each bed was a stained-glass panel by Christopher Webb, sponsored by different groups and societies. These panels are an example of Webb's early work and are considered to be amongst his best.
