

Flowers

Brief description: This rectangular panel with cut-off corners depicts several flowers painted in enamels. They appear to be accurate botanical studies of individual flowers and plants, arranged in an artistic composition.

This rectangular panel with rounded corners depicts several flowers painted in enamels, with leaves in yellow stain and green enamel with purple and mauve roses and auriculas. They appear to be accurate botanical studies of individual flowers and plants, arranged in an artistic composition. The artist William Peckitt has included a flowing ornate feature at the bottom of the panel, which links the stems of the plants together. At the end of one of these stems a diamond pendant hangs in the lower right hand corner. Inside the pendant, in small writing, is Peckitt's signature. The panel was originally installed alongside a number of other small painted panels in a window in Gisburne Park, an 18th century country house in Lancashire owned by Thomas Lister (1723-61).
